

A DEAD PARTY LEADER.

At last the man whose life has been passed amid the storm of bitter political strife, has passed to a welcome, peaceful rest.

James G. Blaine, recognized throughout the world as one of the greatest political leaders ever produced in this country, has finally laid down the burden of a Nation's cares and gone to that slumber which for years has been the longing of his life.

In the prime of his manhood no man was better qualified by disposition or by mental training for the intellectual struggles into which he threw his ever ready gauntlet of defiance so unreservedly.

He was the gladiator who loved the bloody sands of the political arena and the ground where he stood was always strewn with the fragments of shattered shields and litter of splintered steel.

On all occasions he met blow with blow, he fought foot to foot, neither asking or giving quarter until the spot where he fought was the very vortex of the battles swirl and above the sounds of combat his strong voice even rang out a clarion call to his followers.

He finally attained the ambition of his life, a nomination to the Presidency and when victory seemed within his grasp, the unguarded utterance of Burchard and a rainstorm that kept the farmers of New York from the polls, coupled with Conklings apathy, sent him to defeat.

It was a rainstorm before the battle of Waterloo that made a sunken road and death trench to Napoleons cavalry and the weather sent Blaine to his political St. Helena. This defeat coupled with the cowardly attacks on him in the campaign, broke his spirit and deadened his ambition. Following this in the closing years of his life, death stalked in his family and so the rugged warrior of a hundred fields of strife, sought peace and forgetfulness as the balm for wounded ambition and prayed for death as the anodyne for sorrow.

It would almost be worth one's while to die to see the meeting in the beyond, between the spirit of Blaine and the shade of Roscoe Conkling, whom Blaine held most responsible for his Presidential defeat.

It was a member of the Senate from Sacramento county named Thomas Jefferson Green who earned for the first California Legislature its title of the "Legislature of a Thousand Drinks." Green was accustomed to keep a demijohn of cognac (all brandy was "cognac" in those days) under the stairs of the State House, and whenever he was thirsty, which was frequently, would move the Senate to adjourn and invite its sixteen members out to take a drink from his demijohn. It is hardly necessary to say that Green's motions to adjourn the Senate always carried unanimously. After the session of the Legislature closed, Thomas Jefferson Green's empty demijohn was found beneath the State House stairs and some nameless scapegrace took it and hoisted it to the top of the Liberty pole, where for six long weeks it hung and swung as a hollow and sounding memorial of the "Legislature of a thousand drinks."

The Bi-Chloride University.

Two of the students at the Bi-Chloride University will graduate sometime this week. They entered the Freshman class nearly three weeks ago, and they declare that John Barleycorn's society has no longer any charms for them and in fact that his presence is absolutely obnoxious. The Junior and Sophomore classes, we understand, are getting along finely, and will probably be ready to receive their graduating diplomas after the usual course. It is expected that the University will receive quite an addition to its studentship after the adjournment of the Legislature. The faculty is highly pleased with the results so far accomplished.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup should always be used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays the pain, cures wind colic and is the best remedy for diarrhoea. Twenty five cents a bottle.

Elegant Souvenirs.

The elegant souvenir cards laid at each plate at the Stewart Banquet were the work of Lambert Hyman of San Francisco. The work evoked much comment and the cards will be treasured by the guests of the banquet as happy mementos of the occasion.

The crowd at the keno game at the Monarch Saloon is increasing every night. The big pots and small percentage, is the drawing card.
